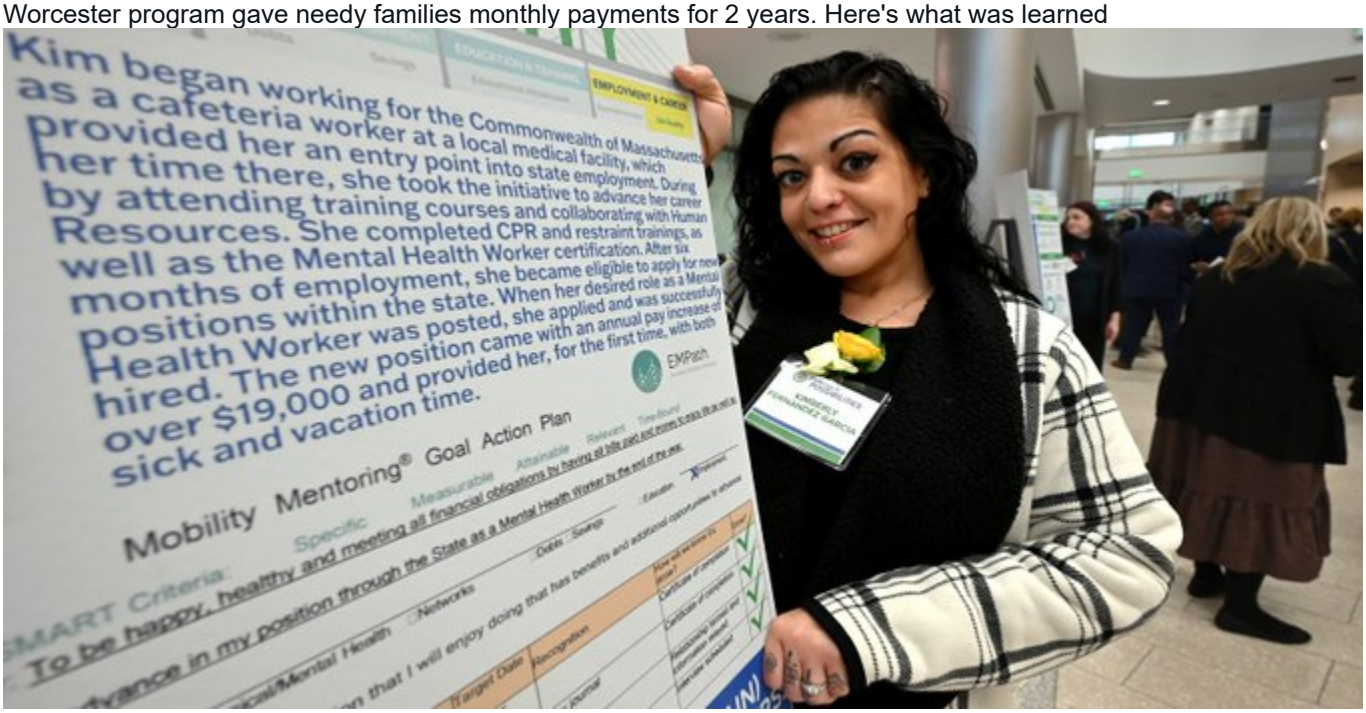
Worcester program gave needy families monthly payments for 2 years. Here's what was learned



Kim began working for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as a cafeteria worker at a local medical facility, which provided her an entry point into state employment. During her time there, she took the initiative to advance her career by attending training courses and collaborating with Human Resources. She completed CPR and restraint trainings, as well as the Mental Health Worker certification. After six months of employment, she became eligible to apply for new positions within the state. When her desired role as a Mental Health Worker was posted, she applied and was successfully hired. The new position came with an annual pay increase of over $19,000 and provided her, for the first time, with both sick and vacation time.

Good interview with Miss Obama, but let me take this opportunity to point out how sneaky the show's producers actually are: for months they were uploading reruns & acting like these were "new" episodes, but now that Kelly has finally returned to the recording studio, they've gone back & labeled all those episodes as "re-releases" (pretty shady stuff!) #ItCantBeAllStickAndNoCarrot

* Use a screwdriver to put it in neutral
* Push it halfway into the garage to reach the outlet

"Do you remember when you first found out professional wrestling was 'fake'?" ... I remember exactly, the '87 Slammy Awards when Hacksaw Jim Duggan & Harley Race were brawling backstage, then some stagehand casually walks a llama into frame (Gorilla Monsoon even said "A llama? Who knows what's next to come here!", & I knew!)

Just watched Night 2 of "WrestleMania 41" via

* IYO looked great (but was she intentionally wearing Buzz Lightyear colors?)
* Priest should've had ear plugs for that chair shot!
* Dirty Dom the fan favorite has arrived
* Was holding out hope for Rusev, oh well
* Announcers really kissed Logan's ass during that match, eh wot?
* Lyra lookin' like the Sorceress from Castle Grayskull!
* Someone seemed to be missing from that main event, hmm

* Jade Cargill's costume made her back look like a stegosaurus
* Weird to announce the acquisition of AAA & then immediately have one of your top luchadors lose to a white guy in a mask 🤦

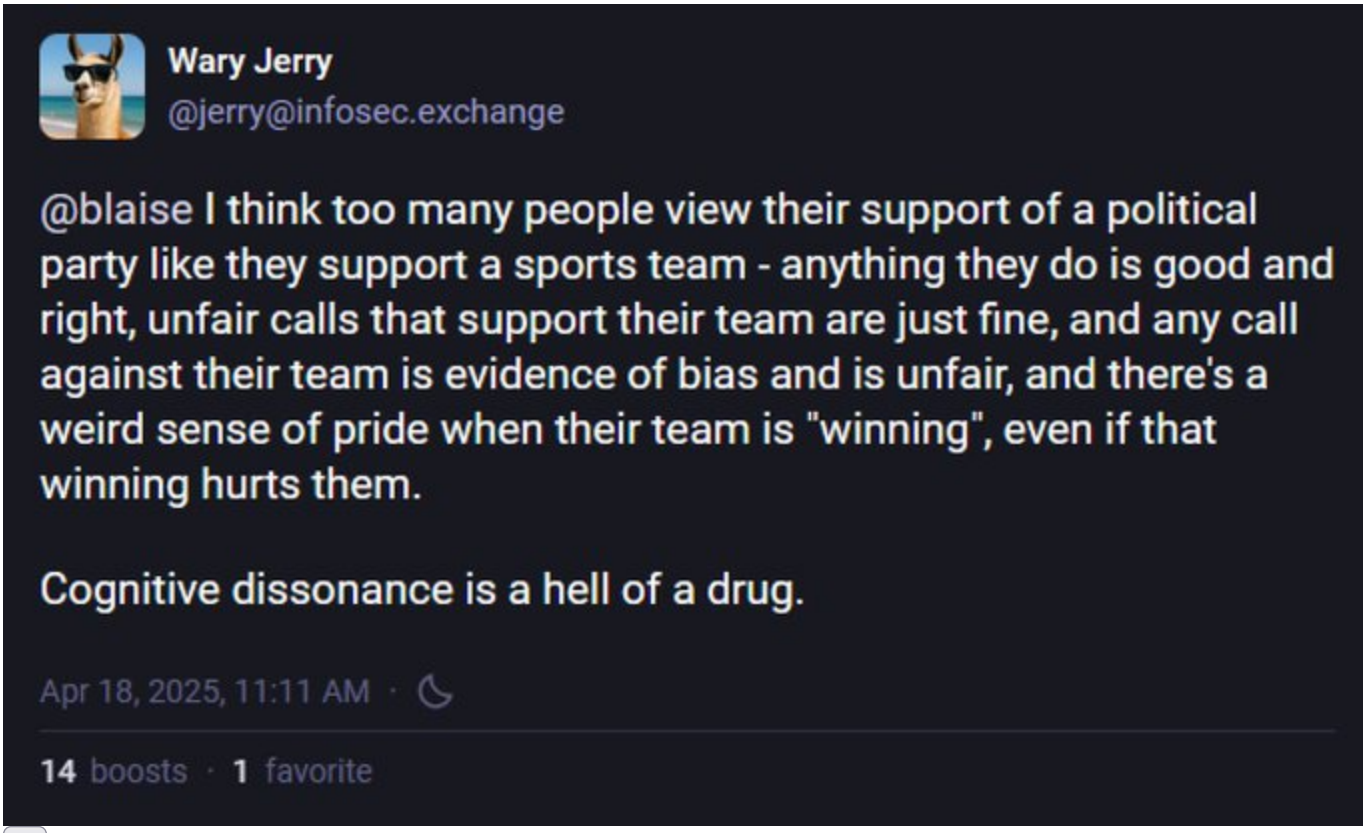
"Too many people view their support of a political party like they support a sports team ... " 🤔



Wary Jerry
@jerry@infosec.exchange
@blaise I think too many people view their support of a political party like they support a sports team - anything they do is good and right, unfair calls that support their team are just fine, and any call against their team is evidence of bias and is unfair, and there's a weird sense of pride when their team is "winning", even if that winning hurts them.
Cognitive dissonance is a hell of a drug.

Technically, I only woke up ONE TIME during the night ... but it was around 4:30, so ended up being a real struggle to fall back asleep (think it goes back to taking my BP several times yesterday, and while most of the readings were perfectly normal, my mind only wants to focus on the time right before dinner when it ended up being 135/85 or something along those lines) 💤

Woke up around one o'clock last night (peeked at the alarm clock, stupid stupid!) ... but, for some reason, got it in my head that I had been awake the whole time, so that got me agitated and made it difficult to fall back asleep (but I did it!) 😔

Anyway, this morning the side of my face was all warm, so decided to take my blood pressure ... and it was 111/77 (!), so I guess that's not what's been keeping me awake at night after all 💤

The best tip I've seen in Satchin Panda's book thus far? If you wake up during the night, don't look at your alarm clock, because the light might trick your brain into thinking it's the sun & keep you from falling back asleep!

Anyway, I did end up stirring from my slumber sometime last night, then went back to sleep ... only it felt like I woke up again after just a few minutes, which left me agitated & disconsolate :(

When I started #RAW on

"In our lifetimes, every single one of us is put to the test. It's not gonna come in the form or at the time you would prefer, but we'll all be put to the test somehow, some way. And so, are you gonna walk out of it? Are you? Or are you gonna die of shame? Which, to me, is just another way of saying 'Are you gonna give up?' "One way or another, alarm attenuation depends on others. The only question is whether the calming person is physically beside us or psychologically inside us. Search your memory for a moment when the presence of another person caused your guard to let down. If you don’t recall such a moment, call to mind a person you feel genuinely at ease with. Link that person’s face, voice, and touch to each relational challenge in your life ... " #PanicFree

"Or, if we believe lack of worry causes bad things to happen, we worry to avoid tempting fate. If you can see through the myth that expectation of disaster helps prevent it, maybe that will allow you to take the risk of relaxing. But if that is too big a risk, consider choosing to worry just enough. Pick a specific thing to worry about, and worry about only that. Or set aside a specified few minutes once a day to worry ... "Is there any good reason to stay all tensed up? Well, there is a common but irrational one. When calamity has taken place 'out of the blue,' we are shocked by the realization that some meaningless random event could end our life. For relief, we may turn to magical thinking. The belief that everything happens for a reason offers us the illusion of control. For example, if we believe calamity is punishment for wrongdoings, we seek to control calamity by avoiding sin ... "A person can be comforted by the certainty produced by psychic equivalence: instead of imagining disaster and becoming certain of it, they imagine divine protection and are certain of it. Belief that one is protected in this way can control anxiety - but only, of course, if there is no doubt. A person who has been panic free can become unexpectedly subject to panic if their certainty of safety is fractured by doubt ... " #PanicFree

"If stress hormones build up to high levels, psychological changes may take place, such as feeling unreal or surreal, dissociated or disoriented, or having a sense of looking at yourself from the outside. Other changes may include a loss of sense of self, of time, or of location. So far as I know, Scooby-Doo is the only cartoon character who demonstrates such changes. Imagine that Scooby-Doo's owner has left him in a kennel in some unfamiliar place ... " #PanicFree

"Popeye, being macho, doesn’t want Olive to know he has panic attacks. Feeling anxious, he decides to fortify himself with his usual remedy, spinach. Reaching into his pocket, he finds it empty. No spinach! This is an emergency. Stress hormones push him to breathe faster. He breathes as fast as he can. Nevertheless, continued stress hormone release demands that he breathe faster. Since he can’t, he gets the idea that he isn’t getting enough air ... " #PanicFree

If the child’s need for safety is not met, the child may develop into an adult who controls hyperarousal by trying to control the situation he is in. Just finished my 2nd sleep consultation, hopefully got some good advice ...

- Lie down with hands under navel, middle fingers touching
- Inhale through nose, filling your belly while counting to four
- Hold breath & count to seven
- Exhale while counting to eight WITH YOUR MOUTH OPEN

We'll see if that helps! 💤

Bloomberg: Robin Zhu, an analyst at Sanford C. Bernstein, said ahead of the announcement that Nintendo has prepared a supply chain network that will allow the company to sell more than 20 million units in its first year. That compares with the current Switch's sale of around 15 million units in its first four quarters.

So apparently,
@netflix
will let you pause during a live event, but don't leave it paused TOO long or it'll boot you back to the home screen (and then you have to fast forward to the spot where you left off without the benefit of the little thumbnails at the bottom of the screen)... Anyway, watched the Punk/Rollins main event, good stuff!
